Who is the cheater in the video? I just realized I didn't say this guy's name, but he's the one that is both cheating AND acting as if he has no clue what's going on. The 6-7 from the umpire, at the very beginning of the clip. He was standing on the boundary fence and letting the white ball roll away from him when this Aussie kid comes out and punches the ball back into the field. When the 6-7 umpire went to check it, the Aussie kid had run all the way back to the umpire, slapped the 6-7 on his head and walked away without so much as a "yeah, you can't do that, it's not allowed." I'm guessing the umpire wouldn't have checked the 6-7 had he known the ball was in play. I wonder if the entire ODI was like this. While cricket is really dead, not in a cemetery dead sort of way, I think that this video does show how much umpires have to do for such games of this type. It's not really the thing to get into, especially when you see the great players, however a rookie may not get it right. I know i wouldn't. According to this news story, an Australian tennis player was drugged before playing his match with Tim Henman last year and wasn't allowed to play. I don't know what the story is regarding this British player, but I imagine that it's probably not too different. Perhaps some of the players play drugs or maybe a scuffle happens on court. I remember something about that on the Tennis Channel. Unlikely, I don't think he is a tennis player at all. What I think he is is a tennis coach. According to the news article, the 20 year old umpire was being transferred to a job closer to home and had a farewell match for the umpiring staff. I wonder if they're still paying him to do this. Maybe he gets paid and the parents get to watch their son do something that would normally be frowned upon. There's no professional sport I'd be happier to sit in on than cricket. For some reason, the cricket I saw at the ballpark the other day was a 82157476af
